

I moved to Chicago from a small town in North Dakota and was amazed by the radio stations here in a big city. Amazed at how much pure crap they put out. I figured in all places, somewhere like Chicago would have a nice media selection, and radio stations that weren't all about the almighty dollar. But I was incredibly wrong.

Then one day I decided to purchase satellite radio, and I've never been happier. I used to wonder "why pay for something if you can get it for free?" but the quality and choices are well worth my money.

I think it'd be a shame if the NAB limited the rights of the satellite radio providers. And honestly, it doesn't seem legal. They provide fair competition and hopefully will make regular broadcast stations realize just how poorly liked they've become.

Allow us to keep a choice and deny the NAB their chance to unfairly deny me the service I have rights to.
